[Date: 2009-08-27]

A new EU-funded project aims to develop economically and environmentally efficient techniques for the production of biofuels. Called NEMO ('Novel high-performance enzymes and micro-organisms for conversion of lignocellulosic biomass to bioethanol'), the initiative will generate new ways of converting agricultural and forestry waste, such as straw and wood chips, into liquid biofuels.

Cooperation

The specific programme on 'Cooperation' supports all types of research activities carried out by different research bodies in trans-national cooperation and aims to gain or consolidate leadership in key scientific and technology areas.

FP7 allocates EUR 32 413 million to the Cooperation programme. The budget will be devoted to supporting cooperation between universities, industry, research centres and public authorities throughout the EU and beyond.

The Cooperation programme is sub-divided into ten distinct themes. Each theme is operationally autonomous but aims to maintain coherence within the Cooperation Programme and allowing for joint activities cutting across different themes, through, for example, joint calls.

The ten identified themes reflect the most important fields of knowledge and technology where research excellence is particularly important to improve Europe's ability to address its social, economic, public health, environmental and industrial challenges of the future. Their continued relevance will be guaranteed by relying on a number of sources from the research sector, including the European Technology Platforms (ETP). Important themes identified in the Strategic Research Agendas (SRAs) developed by the ETPs are therefore covered by the Cooperation programme.

Across all these themes, support to trans-national cooperation will be implemented through.

Life sciences and biotechnology

The strategy for Europe on life sciences and biotechnology \(COM\(2002\)27\) (1895 KB) proposes technologies which will help the EU achieve the long-term jobs and growth targets established by the Lisbon Strategy.

The strategy consists of two parts: policies, and a 30-point plan to transform policies into action. The plan suggests what action is required from other public and private stakeholders. The strategy therefore focuses on co-operation between them.

The Commission has monitored the implementation of the strategy and published regular progress reports.

In 2007, the Commission carried out a mid-term review of the strategy, based on an in-depth study (the European Parliament) examined the economic, social and environmental consequences of the strategy for the environment. The Commission has taken the study as an opportunity to revise the strategy, and to propose a new strategy for Europe on life sciences and biotechnology.
